Extracellular matrix proteins regulate gene expression of secreted human interferon gamma and interleukin 4. We have investigated the effects of extracellular matrix proteins, such as fibronectin and collagen, on interferon gamma (IFN gamma) and interleukin 4 (IL-4) secretion in human T cell clones. Addition of fibronectin to the culture medium increased secretion of IFN gamma and IL-4. Collagen was also effective in inducing the secreted form of IFN gamma. The effects of extracellular matrix proteins were dose dependent and did not depend on the growth state of the T cell clones. However, expression of the membrane-bound forms of IFN gamma and IL-4 was not induced by fibronectin. These results suggest that secretion of IFN gamma and IL-4 from human T cell clones is regulated by the extracellular matrix proteins.

The effects of antihypertensive drug treatment on blood pressure during exercise in hypertensive patients. The effect of antihypertensive treatment on blood pressure during exercise was investigated in 26 mild to moderate hypertensive patients (16 men and 10 women; mean age 46 +/- 10 years; mean resting blood pressure 177/101 mm Hg) and compared with that of a control group of hypertensive patients with blood pressures under 140/90 mm Hg (6 men and 7 women; mean age 38 +/- 6 years). During arm-cuff exercise at rates of 60, 120, and 180 beats/min, blood pressures were recorded manually. After drug treatment, the patients were reexamined and exercise was performed in a random order with the antihypertensive drug or placebo given beforehand. The patients were maintained on their therapy for a period of 4 weeks. Only maximal exercise testing was performed at the end of the study. Before treatment the blood pressures during exercise were substantially higher than in the control group (177/101 vs 152/90 mm Hg at 120 beats/min; P less than.05; 140/90 vs 122/70 mm Hg at 60 beats/min; P less than.001; and 130/90 vs 126/70 mm Hg at
